About the Vindagua

The Vindagua is a student publication of Lee University, located in Cleveland, Tennessee. Volume 65 was printed by Herff Jones Publishing Company in Montgomery, Alabama. Full-time students purchased the books as a part of their school fees. The 284 pages were compiled using five eMacs in the Adobe Creative Suite. Photos were scanned using an Epson Perfection 2450 scanner. Laura Farmer served as the Herff Jones Representative. The cover is a litho silkscreen quarterbound and was designed by the Herff Jones staff. The idea for the dividers was created by Betty King. The primary font used was AHJ Schnittger.

From the Editor...

This year, the Vindagua has experienced many challenges. We've encountered new people in new positions, we've tackled new sections and new colors, we've experienced new ideas and new forms of creativity. The fresh perspective was intimidating at first but has since redeemed itself with an excellent team, an excellent working environment and an excellent book. Excellence could be defined as doing one's best and I could easily say that every editor, adviser, representative and practicum student has participated with excellence towards the creation of this book.

Sara - You have an eye for design and a very quiet strength. You've given yet another year of your time, energy and talent toward the staff and your pages. I would say, and I think you would agree, that you've helped keep our out-of-control staff, stable and sincere.

Erika - You've courageously moved from one section to the next and have produced innovative ideas in each. Don't let anyone look down on you for being the red-headed step-child known as the mystical Zelda.

John - The Alfa-Male... you continue to keep us in laughter while pouring hours of thought into your spreads. Your marker board drawings were appreciated and your random bursts of energetic dance moves were always questioned.

Maureen - Thank you for Pierre and GusGus. As always, you sustained the staff with support and encouragement. You stepped up and taught a class you had never taken and above all, you fed us. Don't ever say you don't do anything. Ha!

Beth - You have graduated from the hall pass - you have proven yourself exceedingly reliable this year by jumping into the middle of a crazy semester and faithfully fabricating remarkable spreads for two different sections. I have admired your hard work and dedication... and your sudden burst of energy.

Cara - I've always been truly inspired by your pen and paper. The way that you write is graceful and reflective and your design ideas created a strength for the beginning of our book. It has truly been a privilege to call you a Vindiggie.

Colleen - You've never failed us - you came in during a hard semester and were faithful and impressive with your amazing photography and your hard work with the Student Expressions pages. Thank you for your painting skills and contagious laughter - you and Jack both have been adopted by the Vindiggies.

Dr. Kailing - Special K, we owe you our lives. Your knowledge and understanding of the computer world has surpassed our own and we delight in your presence in the pub lab.

Mr. Trowbridge - Mr. T., how could we have done it this year without you? Your bottomless bowl of chocolate drew us in, your wit made us laugh and your care and concern held us together - individually and collectively. Thank you for your open door.

This is our Vindiggie family - a collection of talented individuals with desire and passion for fun, friendship, excellence and hard work. We've spent time making our work environment human friendly with red walls, clustered computers, a comfortable couch (thank you, Michelle Wetherill) and the warmth of our beautiful yet wobbly floor lamps. The creativity didn't stop with InDesign - instead, it spilt into our living courters, our lively staff meetings and our friendships with each other. This is what makes a yearbook project excellent - the dedication of every individual, the support of their words and the teamwork collectively compiled. Thank you, Vindiggies.

And thank you - you who is picking up this yearbook and flipping through pages of historical events and favorable memories. It has been a privilege to create this book of pictures and stories for the benefit of every Lee University member who will treasure the time and energy spent making themselves and this school better.

Profiles

Welcome to the section that lets you into the heart of Lee University. The Profiles section takes 12 individuals from Lee's campus and sheds light on their intriguing story - pictures, quotes, laughter and all. The section spotlights faculty, students and employees that make up and enhance the face of our campus. These faces may seem familiar and perhaps after reading through this section, familiarity will be taken to a whole new level.

Cara Beale brought her inspiration and creativity to the staff and to the Profiles section this semester. Her exquisite writing ability flowered the section and her humor kept us entertained during our weekly meetings.

PROFILES

Sabina Shrestha is stumbling upon cultural differences one at a time. "In America, even the Coke tastes different!" exclaims the Nepali-born freshman. Culture shock is an additional adjustment for international students new to the college experience. "We're all spoiled brats," she jokes about the record-setting number of Nepalese students currently attending Lee. "We didn't know what it was to adjust or adapt until we came here."

Growing up in Thamel, the tourism capital of Nepal, Sabina claims that she has always been bilingual, helping her mother and father sell handmade clothes to foreigners in their family's clothing store. Thanks to such social exposure and her studious manner, she's fluent in English, Nepali, Hindi, Pakistani and Newari, with plans to learn Italian. At 18, she journeyed overseas to study biology at Lee University with the hope of becoming an environmental engineer.

Sabina enters a Christian campus with an intriguing religious background. Hailing from Nepal, a country of 330 million gods, Sabina comes from a hybrid religion - a mix of Hinduism and Buddhism. Despite who's preaching what, she's careful not to do things just for the sake of it. Aware of Americans' tendency to be ever smiling, Sabina reserves her girlish grin for close acquaintances. "If I smile at someone, I want it to be genuine."

Perhaps the most difficult adjustment has been adapting to the small town atmosphere. Expecting Cleveland to be more like the cultural mecca in which she grew up, Sabina was shocked on her drive into Tennessee when she spotted cows and thought, "We're going to a village!" Self-described as an extrovert and introvert all in one, Sabina is growing accustomed to her humble abode in Nora Chambers Hall. Being away from home has been difficult, but she claims that helpful people are making the transition easier. For now, she's content to hang out with friends, enjoy American food and meet new people. "That's what I'm here for - to have a new experience." Copy and layout by Cara Beale. Photo by John Diffenderfer.

dr. charles CONN

"There's only one Edna Minor Conn, I'll tell you that right now," says Dr. Charles William Conn. The father of 12, including Lee's current president Dr. Paul Conn, speaks of his beloved late wife with the bright eyes of a schoolboy. The two met while enrolled at the Church of God Bible Training School and were married in 1941. Though an accomplished academic, preacher, and author, Charles counts the greatest achievement of his 85 years as "finding Edna Minor and realizing what a jewel I had."

"He's a charming gentleman," says grandson Brian Conn, Lee's Director of Public Information, on behalf of Charles. "My granddad Conn came from humble beginnings to become a church leader, a gifted author and poet, a trusted historian and a world traveler."

As Lee's president from 1970 to 1982, the elder Dr. Conn remains a campus regular. He can often be found in the cafeteria or at chapel, lavishing students with his wit and charisma. But the jokester takes a serious tone when expressing pride in his family's legacy at Lee. "The Conns are a unique people," says Charles. "They think they can do it, and if they work at it, they can."

"I hear that there's a rumor going around that I swam in the fountain," senior Amy Beth Bullard says with a grin. "I'm just going to plead the Fifth Amendment," says Amy Beth, whose midnight disguise, a hat and sunglasses, apparently failed her that fateful night in front of the administration circle.

Though she denies the fountain dip, she's adamant about her love of the YMCA pool. "It's where I go to get away," says Amy Beth of the roped-off swimming lane where she swims freestyle and backstroke. Get away from what? "Screaming, hyped-up middle school girls," says Amy Beth in reference to Sparkle!, a program of the ministry that occupies most of her time.

This Knoxville native is the director of Starlite Ministries, the organization she single-handedly created as a sophomore here at Lee. Her original vision has grown from mentoring 30 freshmen girls to after-school programs that now reach an average of 400 middle and high schoolers every week. After graduation, Amy Beth plans to further the ministry in the city where it got its start. She claims, "I could see myself in Cleveland for the rest of my life." *Copy and layout by Cara Beale. augustin BOCCO

If Augustin Bocco was to return to his home country of Togo, he would be jailed indefinitely without a trial. A student of linguistics at the University of Togo, Augustin was an elected member of the Student Government Movement. Because of the country's modern dictatorship and corrupt government, university students were forced to petition the government on behalf of all students' needs.

In 2000, a number of students from Togo's only national university gathered to petition the government for a library. Twenty-six year-old Augustin was one of the leaders of the organized, peaceful demonstration in the country's capital of Lome. "The army came in and opened fire," says Augustin. "People were killed, arrested and put in jail." After his escape from the unexpected riot, Augustin learned there was a warrant out for the arrest of the Student Government Movement's leaders. "The army and police were going house to house searching for us. The only alternative was to leave the country."

Augustin abruptly left his homeland, family, fiancé and school within a few months of the uprising. Following the political outrage, he came to America "because that is the door that opened for me." Five years ago, when he first set foot on American soil, he spoke only his native tongue, French, and knew no one. Augustin came solely equipped with the name of a Church in Tennessee. After a string of unfortunate events, he found himself in Newark Airport without luggage or money. Thanks to a number of generous strangers, Augustin finally made his way to Cleveland. "I am lucky," he says, "but it was by God's grace."

Because of his fugitive status, Augustin is currently unable to return to Togo. This year he met up with his family and fiancé in Ghana. He married his leading lady following a four-year absence and patiently waits for her to finish school and join him in the States. Now fluent in four languages, Augustin teaches French Language Labs at Lee and works for the Church of God of Prophecy International offices translating letters, books and magazines. Eventually, he wants to return home. "I will go back because I don't believe God brought me here for nothing. Time in the U.S. is preparing me to return and work for greater change in my country. My wish is that one day God would make a way for my country to be a country of freedom." Copy and layout by Cara Beale. Photo by John Diffenderfer.

"Pas de chat, pas de chat, balance, tendu," echoes instruction from ballet teacher Patti Greco, Lee University's own queen of creative movement. The New Jersey native first donned her ballet slippers more than 40 years ago, when her mother gave her a book on Russian ballerina Anna Pavlova, who captured Patti's heart and imagination. Her dreams led her to pursue dance at Florida State, but her talent took her to the Big Apple. She studied dance in New York City, where she trained under some of the top artists of her era and received certification with Dance Educators of America. Since stepping onto the stage, she has made the cut for a 1970's Broadway show and choreographed a number of community theater productions, including Lee's own Fiddler on the Roof. In addition, she has competitive experience in ballroom dancing and carries a silver ranking.

Though she confesses, "I wanted to be Ginger Rodgers," Patti seems to have found her niche in dance instruction. At age six, she knew she wanted to teach and made her university teaching debut at age 22. Today, she continues to help students grow in their walk with Christ through the medium of dance. She has influenced the development of the dance program during her 10-year affiliation with Lee, transforming the original square dancing class and upgrading the classical ballet class.

Having skied the Alps, snorkeled the Keys, and surfed South Beach before it was popular, what could possibly be next on Patti Greco's list of things to accomplish? For now she is enjoying life with Joe, her husband of 23 years, and their daughter, Jessica, which she confesses "is all that I really need." Patti hopes to continue to enhance the lives of her students with God's love and wisdom by pointing them in the right direction - toes first. *Copy and layout by Cara Beale. patti GRECO

"I have a more uninhibited nature about nakedness than most American guys," says Andrew Quinley, the missionary kid who's akin to the social norms of the Philippines. His philosophy on nudity quickly changed after a few awkward moments around Medlin Hall. "I thought missionary kid culture was American culture," he says in defense.

Another culture shock came when Andrew realized that, "in American culture, women are attracted to me." His friendly disposition and the playful and affectionate Filipino nature left Andrew sending unknown signals to the ladies. "There was a wake of broken hearts," he jokes.

Pre-Lee, Andrew spent the first six years of his life in Jamaica and the majority of his 21 years in the Philippines. His decision to attend Lee meant living in the U.S. for the first time. Now a senior advertising major and Clarion photo editor, Andrew is taking fellow foreigners under his wing. "I spend a lot of time with international students. We play about eight hours of Halo every Friday night," says Andrew, the Hicks chaplain. Following his fourth year in the U.S., he plans to return to his Southeast Asian roots for missions work.

dr. gloria CHIEN ning AN

Lee's most musically gifted duo can often be found in the kitchen during a brief instrumental interlude. Concert pianists Dr. Gloria Chien and Ning An take time from their artistic endeavors to appreciate fine food prepared with fresh ingredients. In fact, the pair make the trek down to Super H Mart, their favorite Atlanta grocer, for Kim Chi (fermented cabbage) and green bean ice cream when their schedule allows for such weekend rendezvous.

Both were crafted for performance art from early on. Born in Taiwan, Gloria began piano lessons at age five. At age 14, she ventured west to pursue her talent. The son of musicians, Ning began his piano debut at four years old. Growing up in communist China for the first eight years of his life, Ning came to America as a skeptic. Now he considers himself "more American than Chinese, not just in the way I speak, but in the way I think."

The two met while attending Boston's New England Conservatory of Music. It was in their first Massachusetts winter that Gloria and Ning shared classes, teachers, and rides to and from school. "We prayed for each other before lessons," says Gloria, noting the intimidation factor accompanying their freshman status. Married in 2002, the couple found their way to Lee after capturing the attention of President Paul Conn and wife Darlia at one of Gloria's concerts in Boston.

Despite their prominence in the realm of performance art, artist-in-residence Ning warns that part of a musician's success is found in being alone. "Piano is so lonely. It's a life of solitude," he says. Fortunately for the talented two, they often travel and perform together. Currently an assistant professor in Lee's school of music, Gloria maintains that their artistic goal is to present music that reflects a life rich with experience. Though Tennessee is now home, the musicians travel back to their Eastern roots once a year. Why the annual pilgrimage? "For the food," they agree with a smile. *Copy and Layout by Cara Beale. michelle WETHERILL

Recognize this sunny grin? It's Michelle Wetherill, custodial staffer and friendly bustling body of the Paul Conn Student Union. She's new to Lee University but no stranger to the south. Born in Kentucky and raised in Florida, this mother of two appreciates the Tennessee outdoors. In her time off, Michelle likes to venture out with her husband and sons to local hotspots Chilhowee and Pocket Wilderness. As an energetic extrovert, this mom says the hardest part of motherhood is raising her youngest. "He's stubborn and headstrong, just like me!" says Michelle.

A former preschool teacher and cheerleading coach, Michelle's energy is easy to spot. She's also a licensed nail technician and esthetician. "I love doing makeovers," she confesses, adding that she would like to eventually employ said skills in Cleveland. Currently, her main focus is instilling values in her boys and raising them well. Her ten-year-old son Bradley says, "My mom is cool because she let me bring home a tarantula even though she is scared beyond all reason of spiders."

This fun loving madre's weekends include singing, hiking, and shopping. But when Monday rolls around, she's more than willing to return to her full-time custodial position. "I really appreciate all the students' encouragement to me," says Michelle with a smile. Copy and layout by Cara Beale. Photos by John Diffenderfer.

Cara Rogers smiles and calls by name the ladies of Atkins-Ellis who breeze in and out of the dorm – all 127 of them. "I like making people feel special. Knowing names helps," says Cara, who wrapped up her fourth and final year as Resident Director of Atkins-Ellis in May of 2006. "I have loved being an RD."

She and husband Jason expanded the family to three in December 2004 with the birth of Lillian Carol. Due to pre-eclampsia and HELLP syndrome, Cara had to deliver 7½ weeks early. "It was a difficult recovery mentally, physically and emotionally," she says, giving props to husband Jason for his support. Post-Lillian, Cara says, "I understand more about God's love than ever before. I love my child because she is mine, not because of what she does. There is nothing she can do to change my love for her. It's a refreshing parallel."

The down-to-earth couple enjoys a music mix of Celtic and bluegrass, good food, and reruns of I Love Lucy on weekends of r&r. Juggling marriage, motherhood, school, and work, the art of balance is a must. How does Cara manage so many demands on her time? "One day at a time, sometimes hour by hour," she says with her signature smile.

Earning two undergraduate degrees, three masters, and a doctorate, Dr. Donald Smeeton is quite possibly one of the most knowledgeable people at Lee University. He's able to partially determine the history of downtown Cleveland's Old Woolen Mill just by eyeing the bricks. The history buff spent 20 years in Europe, teaching and working in educational administration in Brussels. "It's a job requirement to be bilingual in Belgium. Every bus driver speaks at least two languages," notes Donald, who understood that to gain standing in Europe meant submitting himself to European education. He attended the University of Louvain – the Catholic equivalent of Harvard – where his dissertation presentation on William Tyndale was met with highest honors. Adding to his academic acclaim, Donald is highly published with close to 100 articles appearing in various journals.

For 25 of his years spent abroad, Donald was also an Assemblies of God missionary. He ministered in South Africa, a place he characterizes by "dynamic, incredible suffering." Donald says, "My heart is still closer to Africa than to Europe. In Africa, there is so much tragedy, so much injustice, and yet in the middle of it all, an incredible responsiveness to God." He jokes that in South Africa, "even when I preached, people got saved!" He returned to the states following the death of his first wife, stating "I knew it was a time of transition for life, for me." It was during this time that he also faced the unexpected loss of his daughter. He cites faith in God as his sustenance during that tumultuous time in his life.

Now happily remarried to Debbie, Donald is content to call Cleveland home. Entering his fourth year as Lee's library director, Donald says, "I didn't expect this career." He suspects that it can be traced back to his love of knowledge and passion for reading. Though he admits he's too driven in terms of work, Donald breaks for travel and time with his 10 grandchildren. Copy and layout by Cara Beale. Photo by John Diffenderfer.

eli KRETZMANN

There's a reason behind Eli Kretzmann's lumberjack look. This camper, hiker, and climber dons plaid for the best possible reason: "I look good in it, so I wear it. Plus, it's outdoorsy," says the Grangeville, Idaho, native. Hailing from a one-stoplight town, Eli grew up appreciating the rugged, grandiose landscape of his central Idaho home.

Since heading east, he's taken up yet another outdoor sport - bouldering (rock climbing without ropes). The adventurer explains, "I like having fun, doggone it. Fear of height and death are half of what makes it so exciting." In addition to his extreme excursions, Eli plays classical piano, listing Chopin as a personal favorite.

This business administration major and Medlin RA has post-graduation hopes to payoff college loans as quickly as possible and head straight for New Zealand's spectacular trekking and scenery. As for the masses of attractive, single women rumored to be backpacking across NZ, Eli says, "It would just be a perk."

dr. rachel RENESLACIS

"I will not become the kind of woman who's scared to go to Africa," declares Dr. Rachel Reneslacis, who spent six weeks of summer teaching in Kenya. In overcoming said fear, the Assistant Professor of English even indulged in an African safari while teaching classes at Discipleship University, a missionary school offering religion degrees. "I was so fascinated by understanding little bits of the culture," she says, adding that the students went out of their way to ensure that she was comfortable.

In talking with her students, she learned that they wanted to come to the states to attend college. A poignant realization came when her eager undergrads learned the price of an American education. "The luck of where you're born determines the opportunity for education," says Rachel. "A look of heartbreak crossed their faces; it was an unimaginable amount of money to them."

This connoisseur of contemporary art enjoys teaching, traveling, and exploring great metropolitan areas such as NYC. "All writers are voyeurs at heart," says Rachel, whose previous treks include the Czech Republic and Ukraine. After the completion of her lengthy dissertation, Rachel is eager to author something else. In addition to exploring the literary realm of creative nonfiction, she says, "I want to write a piece about Ash Wednesday." Currently in her eighth year of teaching at Lee, Rachel hopes to set foot in the schools of six continents as she continues to share her wit and wisdom with students worldwide. *Copy and layout by Cara Beale. Sara Hall is our longest standing section editor and continues to marvel so many with her techniques and talent. She spent the fall designing and creating her usual masterpieces for this colorful Lifestyles section.

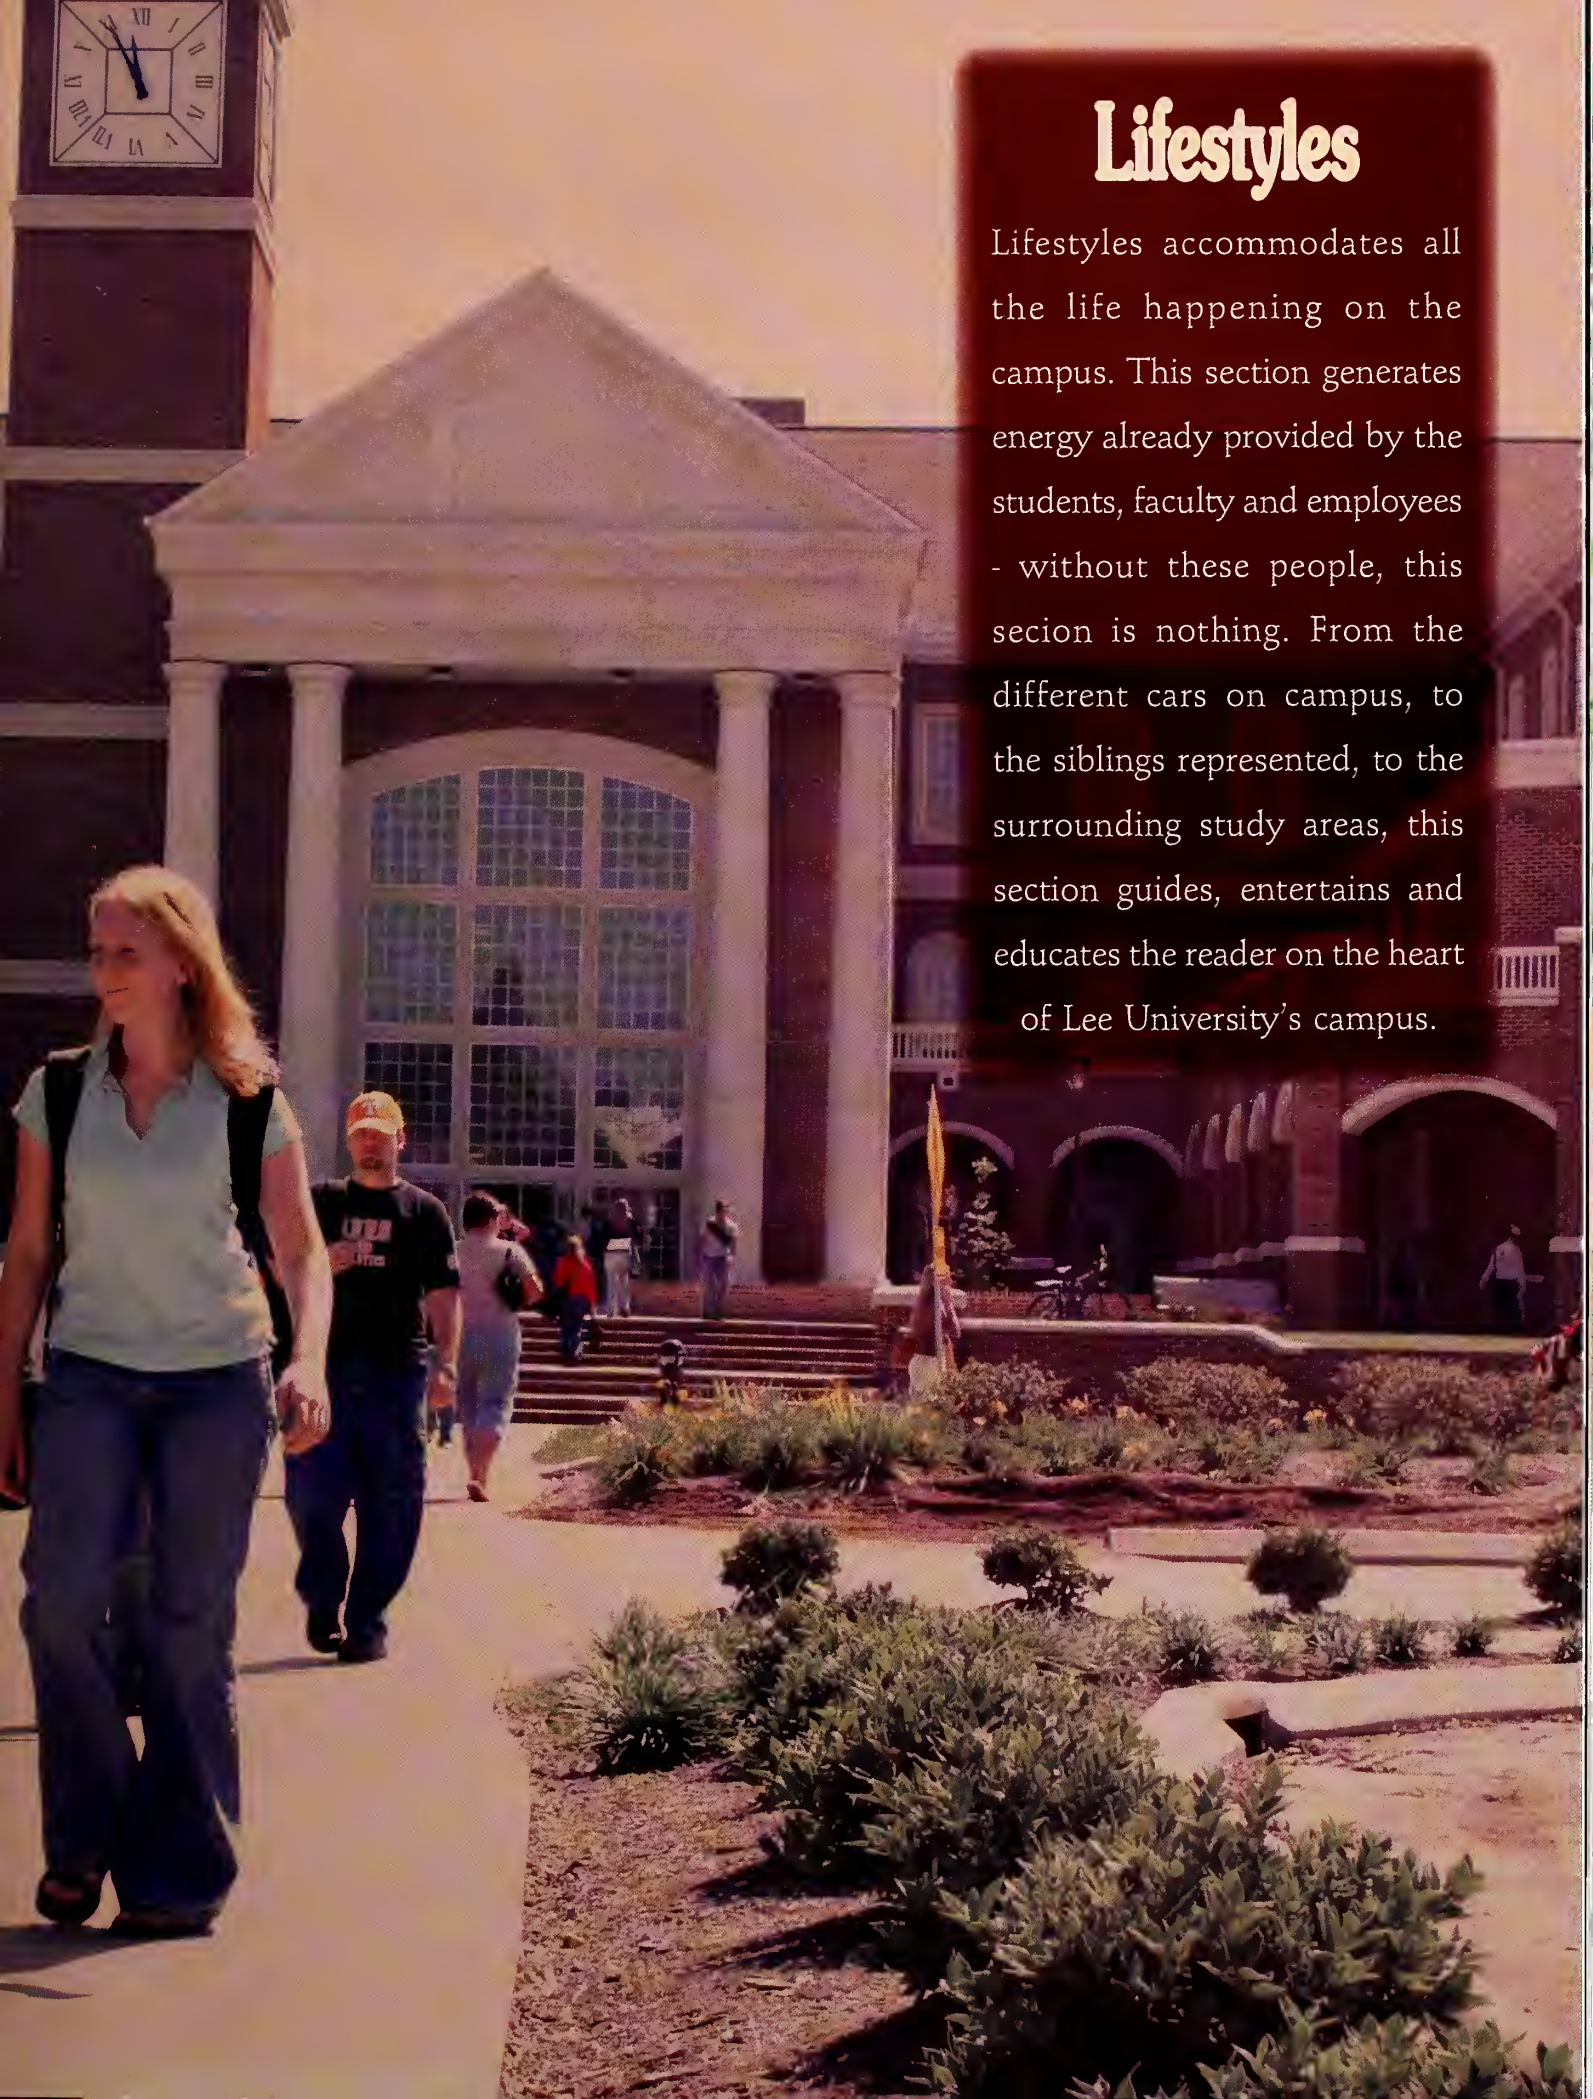
Erika Peters wooed us with her creative skills as she tackled a color section for the first time. She spent the fall semester gathering ideas and people to make her pages flow nicely and entertain whosoever desires to read.

Elizabeth Cave is the newest addition to the Vindagua staff. The spring semester was her first on color and her work was done with excellence and confidence. She has added humor and flare to the Vindagua family.

John Diffenderfer strolled into an editor position for the spring after his phenomenal job as the Vindagua photographer in the fall. He brilliantly added the Diffenderfer touch to the Lifestyles section this year.

LIFESTYLES



Lifestyles

Lifestyles accommodates all the life happening on the campus. This section generates energy already provided by the students, faculty and employees - without these people, this secion is nothing. From the different cars on campus, to the siblings represented, to the surrounding study areas, this section guides, entertains and educates the reader on the heart of Lee University's campus.

Study Spots

Studying, at any time of the year, is vital for students and their grades. Our campus is social. How do you avoid a social campus and the need to quench the social thirst when classes are demanding our attention? The amount of studying is determined by the decision on destination.

Student Union - flippant

The Student Union is a living room to many of Lee's students. A living room full of your best friends is not an equation that formulates solid study time. If you are a dedicated student and have no way of escaping campus, you may be able to find a corner that is devoid of life and get an ounce of studying done, but the majority opinion of the Student Union is a place to study the details of your best friend's life. Above, Andrew High, Rachel Dotson, Mandy Norman, Chase Courtney, Bryce Harper, Evan Ryherd and Matt Moss take a break from studying to engage in some fun.

Cafe Aroma - trivial

When at Café Aroma, you have just barely escaped the Lee University campus enough to have wanted study time. Students feel a small amount of campus independence when retreating to this coffee shop because it's not the coffee shop in the Student Union - the place where studying is clearly difficult. The surprise, to many students, occurs when they walk in the door and realize that not only is every customer a Lee student, but also every hand that serves you. The social monster stares you right in the face. Below, Megan Pierson memorizes her notes for a Theology test that following week.

Panera - moderate

You are now far enough from campus to turn the social energy into productive study time. Familiar faces are located sporadically throughout the building and will aid in short study breaks, but those familiar faces are moderate as are breaks. This is a good place to go if studying is beneficial but not pertinent. To the right, Leigh Michels and Christian Huff spend the afternoon studying Art History.

Denny's - crucial and ruthless

If you have an exam the next day, Denny's will aid in the criticalness of your studying. It's funny how big groups of students can focus and accomplish much. It's in the atmosphere. Open until all hours of the night, this restaurant is notorious for Lee students and their all-nighters. Sustenance is provided and coffee will keep you alert until you finish your mandatory test at 8 a.m. To the left, John Diffenderfer and Julie Tiwari add a moment of fun to the criticalness of their studies.

Library - forlorn and fraught

The library is quiet and occasionally desolate. Studying is severe. Many students realize that, even though on campus, the library will ultimately be the key to your studying success. There is no other reason to be in the corner of the library unless your grade desperately cries out for you to be responsible with your time. Helen Hathaway and Stephanie Wilson take advantage of the quiet atmosphere and focus on their homework.

INTRAMURALS

BASKETBALL

Students enjoy a range of different intramural sports provided by the University including three-on-three basketball, indoor and outdoor soccer, flag-football, indoor and outdoor volleyball and ultimate frisbee. Among these, basketball is one of the most competitive intramural sports.

Flag Football is one of the most popular intramurals here at Lee. Although it can become pretty cold outside during the games, teams enjoy the fun that comes with playing football despite the freezing weather. RUGBY

Mens

This year, the men's rugby team had more new players than ever since the team began in 2002. The new face of Lee's rugby has brought more experience and a better adjusted team.

"We played a much more challenging season than in the past," said Team Captain Elias Wangaard. "We made sure that everyone got playing time so that the whole team would be more experienced for the upcoming competitive season."

CLUB SPORTS

Womens

Women's rugby has been gaining nationwide popularity in the past few years. "This year, our team has been more successful than ever before," said team member Crystal Edwards. "Despite the fact that the team had little experience early on, the new players have picked up the sport quickly and everyone has been pulling together to make this team more unified." THE FANS

Roaring crowds and screaming fans; what would a ball game be like without these elements? Fans are often overlooked as the spotlight is placed on the athletes, but supportive crowds make or break a game's outcome. Fans have a major influence on the ball players' attitudes. Cheerleaders and students alike all take time out of their busy schedules to go out and support their teams. LEFT: Lee cheerleaders enjoy another Flames game. The Walker Arena Transformed

The Walker Arena has fulfilled and exceeded all expectations of Lee University students, employees and faculty members. The construction finished just in time for all of the Homecoming festivities.

"A lot of people see the addition of 500 seats as the focus," said Director of Athletics Larry Carpenter. "But there is also a new lobby twice as big, new locker rooms, more storage capacity and new coaches' offices."

These renovations have affected the basketball players as well as the volleyball team. During the construction, the basketball team held practice at Ocoee Middle School, while the volleyball team practiced at Bradley Central High School. The teams didn't seem to mind though.

"It will be nice to have new locker rooms and more seating," said Lorean Yates, a Lee Flames Volleyball player. "It will also be nice to have our games more accessible to fans now that they won't have to commute to Bradley."

These welcomed additions to Walker Arena have added on to an already rich history of the building. The facility was constructed in memory of the late Paul Dana Walker, a celebrated athlete at Lee in the mid-1970s. He was inducted into the Lee University Athletic Hall of Fame in November of 2001.

U-CHURCH 234

Church is looking a little different at Lee University for the 2005-2006 school year. While Tuesday and Thursday chapel has remained the same, Sunday night chapel has been revamped, reworked and restructured. Welcome to U-Church 234.

U-Church 234, which is short for University Church, is the new 7:30 p.m. Sunday night chapel, that like its name states, meets the second, third and fourth week of every month. The last Sunday of every month hosts preacher Chris Goins, pastor of the Metropolitan Church of God in Birmingham, Ala. Services usually consist of about 30 minutes of praise-and-worship and 30 minutes of sermon.

Why would Lee institute such a change? "Our paradigm was outdated. We had been doing chapel the same way for years... ever since I was a student at Lee!" Walt Mauldin, vice president of student life, said. "We wanted to make some changes that would attract our student body to chapel."

Over the summer of 2005, discussions were held at the dorms, among students, Student Life staff and on the Cabinet level. Faith Griffith, a graduate student, did surveys on the spiritual vitality of the campus, using the information for her thesis, as well as for helping to reshape the organization of Sunday night chapel. The time was changed from 6 to 7:30 p.m., due to the fact that students wanted a later starting time.

"I think the overall approach we took was to make sure we were presenting an approach the students could own and connect with," Campus Pastor Jimmy Harper said. "We wanted to make it relevant, meaningful and refreshing."

Attendance figures have shown the new format to be very well received. Previous semesters averaged about 300-400 students on Sunday night. Fall 2005 saw an average of 742.

"I have heard nothing but positive comments on the restructuring," Harper said. "Students seem to feel at home when they come to U-Church on Sunday nights."

Mauldin agreed, "I think it is here to stay and I invite every student to come and give it a try... A Sunday night of worship and the message all in one hour really helps me to focus on Christ in my own life for the week ahead."

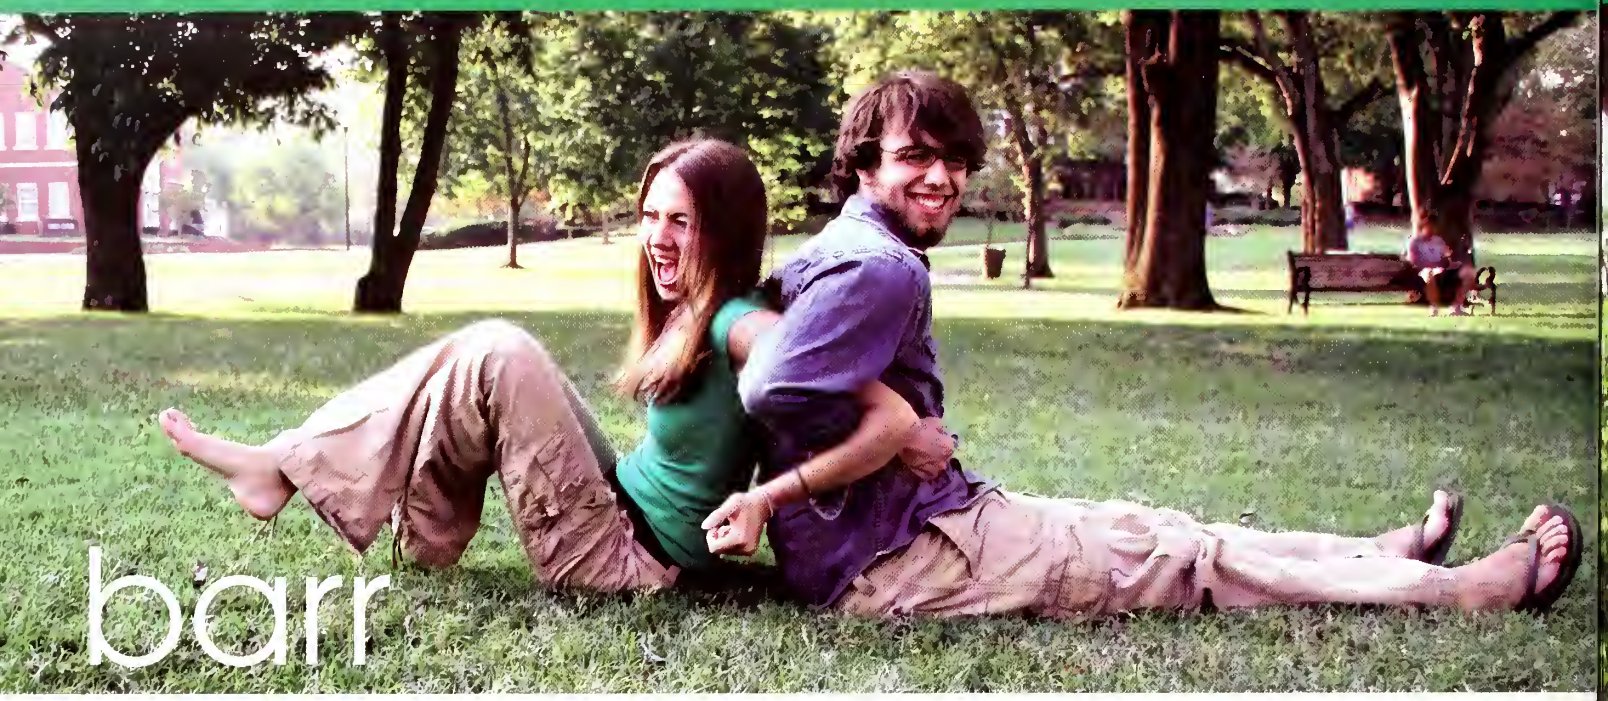
brothersandsisters



"We're good friends. We see each other probably more than most siblings do – about ever other day," older brother Keillor Barr said about his younger, freshman sister Kandee. They are undoubtedly close and for more than one reason. Because of this closeness in age and their unique relationship, it is not uncommon to be mistaken as a couple. "Many people think that we are dating. It's like a disclaimer every time we meet someone new. 'This is my brother, not my boyfriend,'" said Kandee.

In speaking of relationships, sophomore Keillor seems to be having a difficult time adjusting to having a younger sister on campus, where "ring by spring" is a prevalent epidemic, and the boys are looking just as much as the girls. "I've gotten to what you call the 'protective stage.' The other night I was telling some guy to back off because he was messing with her," said Keillor. Kandee followed with a quick and almost immediate response, "It wasn't even a big deal. Sometimes it can be nice to have someone looking out for you but sometimes I just want to be able to be free to live my own life."

This kind of response is not a surprise after seeing them together. "She is very independent," Keillor commented. "She is the kind who wants to find her own path. I am more dependent than she is."

This brother and sister pair is very honest in the depiction of their relationship, but close enough to understand why and to love each other regardless.

cox & brown

Following in her sister's footsteps in terms of college choice, Lindsey Brown came to Lee four years ago. Now her younger brother Chase is making new beginnings as he starts his freshman year. This all occurs just as college life is coming to a close for their older sister Vivian Cox. Since their choice in school is so similar, many may not think of them independently, but definite differences surface in all three of them. Similar they seem in most ways, these three have made Lee their own.

Vivian is a married second year graduate student and resident director of Carroll Courts with only a few months to go before she and her husband move. Lindsey is involved in the Student Leadership Council and beginning her senior year, while Chase is new to campus and still getting established.

"Chase being here this year really completed it for me," Vivian said. "My husband and I are moving this year, so having all of us together this last year is great."

Although busy, they do not have a terribly hard time keeping in touch -- especially with Chase. "I don't see them a lot," Chase commented. "But I call them, like when I need to know where the bank is or if I need a ride to the grocery store. It's also really nice having the free laundry," he added jokingly.

"We check up on each other, but mostly on Chase because he's a freshman. We make sure we are doing okay with school and whatever else is going on in our lives," Lindsey said. "Most people think that there would be fighting between us, even a little bit, but we haven't for a long time; not since we were little."

Vivian finished with a smile, "But Lindsey and I do the same for each other and I don't really think it's a problem. We look out for each other but we don't get sick of each other."

brothersandsisters

The Fox sisters, Candace and Kristy, are embarking on their first semester together at Lee this fall. Just looking at them, you wouldn't be able to tell they were even remotely related, but once you get them talking it is immediately apparent that these two are sisters. "We have the same mannerisms, the same voice. We look nothing alike but we sound and act the same way," said Kristy.

"It's so funny because we are completely different," Candace added. "I'm more athletic – she's girly. But we act so much the same. It's what we hear from people the most."

Although they are different in many ways, they are happy to have each other during this time of being so far away from home. Candace said, "When I first got here my freshman year, I was able to make friends and be involved, but I still got homesick. With her being here, it's like having a piece of home."

Finding time to be together is not always easy, but the two of them get off campus whenever they can. "We try to spend time together but we don't see each other all the time," Kristy commented while they both laughed about their last trek outside of the Lee bubble into the greater Cleveland area. They went to Zaxby's to eat lunch and as a joke bought each other pinky friendship rings out of a vending machine.

All together, these girls are a fun loving pair, thankful to have each other around for the company and support when needed, but time enough away that they do not get sick of each other.

Originally from the Central American country of Honduras, Sheyla, Marsella, and Mario Barahona moved to the United States five years ago to New Orleans, Louisiana. Since then, all have found their way here to Lee University.

Sheyla was the first to come. "Even when I was in Honduras there was no question in my mind, I knew that I was coming to Lee." Now married she is finishing her second year in the School of Counseling Graduate program, ready to move on and begin life outside of school.

Marsella, a junior, is a Health and Science major and has spent most of her time growing up in New Orleans. Even though she is away from the chaos, Marsella has been the most troubled by the damage caused by hurricane Katrina. "It's the hardest for me – I just love that city."

Mario, the youngest, and least talkative, is a freshman and appears to be adjusting well to life at Lee. Involved mostly in dorm life, Mario is almost entirely independent of his older and more experienced sisters. "I don't really feel like I am bothered by them. I like to do my own thing and I like it here."

Although they like to spend time together, they are mostly independent of each other and encourage each other to pursue the different talents and interests they each have. "We are all very distinct in what we do. We all have our own attitude, our own personality, and our own passions," said Marsella.

Lauren Williams and Isabelle Lowney are roommates living off-campus and both are happily engaged. As a freshman, Isabelle Lowney met Nathaniel Brouhard during his sophomore year. Their story began while riding home to North Carolina to visit their families during a break. Over time, their friendship became much more than a casual conversation. Nathaniel and Isabelle began dating in the fall of 2004 and since then Isabelle has been romanced with letters and nights out with Nathaniel. While retelling their story sitting closely over a bag gummy worms on a beautiful fall afternoon, they talked of their struggles and the rollercoaster ride that brought them finally to one particular evening on Sept. 23, 2005. According to the happy couple, Nathaniel proposed totally by surprise at a park in nearby Chattanooga. Now, she a junior and he a senior, they will be married summer of 2006.

Although he beat his older brother Nathaniel to the proposal, Nick is engaged to be married o Lauren Williams a month after Nathaniel and Isabelle's wedding. Both are juniors who began ating almost the same time as Nathaniel and Isabelle, during their sophomore year. They met in azzman's Café their first semester and continued to hang out to the end of that year. Before Lauren eft for the summer, she spent an unexpected two hours talking with Nick in the Student Union, vhich was only meant to be a quick goodbye. After miscommunication and a long summer of not earing from one another, Nick and Lauren quickly caught up and their relationship escalated to e more than just friends. They began dating in the fall. Over the past summer, the two became ngaged and now, the rest is history. Two brothers and two roommates are all about to become mily in the course of a year. Copy and layout by Erika Peters.

Browning

Having her daughter, Morgan, attending Lee is not anything out of the ordinary for Dr. Pamela Browning, Chairperson of the Department of Early Education, Elementary and Special Education. Actually, it seems to be something quite natural.

"It's nice having her here on campus, especially because it is something she has wanted for so long," Dr. Browning said. Morgan is majoring in business with full support from her mother.

The Browning family came to Lee when Morgan was only three years old. Before becoming a professor, Dr. Browning was an elementary teacher in Naples, Florida. She taught kindergarten, first and second grades for eleven years. Since then, Morgan has wanted to attend Lee. "I have grown up here. Going to Lee is very normal to me. I've never had it any other way," Morgan said.

Morgan and her mother are close and their actions define that - the way they talk and laugh, the sticky notes Morgan leaves for her mom on the computer screen when her office is empty, these all show aspects of their light-hearted relationship. They both do their best to keep in touch with each other, but always find time for everyone in their family on Sunday afternoons. This is a time for the whole Browning family to catch up from a busy week.

Dr. Laney grinned and leaned back in his chair s he talked about how he met his wife during is army days. He got to the part of his daughter ReAnna being born and she sat straight up in ier chair, ready to talk. A first semester student t Lee, ReAnna was adamant about defining her ndependence. She is an English major, not a Communications major, unlike her father who s chair of the Communication and the Arts Department.

Dr. Laney is a sincerely proud parent. As he sat behind his large desk and once again eased back nto his chair, he went on about ReAnna and how he has just moved to sophomore status because of her dual enrollment in high school, her 4.0 and how she had worked her way through the entire Girl Scouts program. On a more sentimental note, he added how glad he was that ReAnna chose Lee. "I was happy she came. I didn't want her to be very far from home."

Not only has his first child gone away to college, but another event is also about to change both their lives. Dr. Laney will be going on a yearlong sabbatical to Nairobi, Kenya, where he will be teaching in a university graduate program. His family will be moving to Africa with him, all except for ReAnna, who will be staying here at Lee to continue with her education. Dr. Laney doesn't seem to have many worries about leaving his daughter alone here in Cleveland. "I try to give her as much space as she needs. ReAnna is very independent, and I don't think she will have any problems."

For now, the two of them have until July to see each other on a day-by-day basis, until the move is made from America to Africa.

relationships: roommates

Spray paint and acrylics...

...is what you will find on the first floor of Cross Hall along with roommates Sara Renee Murray and resident assistant Jaime Butler. By serendipity, they both wore the same shoes one day and quickly became friends. This incident led them to find other similarities in music and art. Roommate craft nights, spray-painting suitcases and picture frames or taking paintbrush to canvas is not uncommon for these girls. Some of their best times are spent listening to music while Sara Renee makes stencils for her creations and Jaime strokes away with her brush.

An unusual and unlikely pair...

...of friends since the fifth grade, and now freshmen college roommates, five-foot four Joe Jellison and six-foot seven Rick Jump room together on the second floor of Medlin Hall. Rick came to Lee knowing for four years he would attend the school, following in the footsteps of his older brother. In contrast, Joe decided three weeks before school began to apply. Because of their prior and current friendship and their conflicting schedules, rooming has been the best option for the two of them. Rick spends most of his time with schoolwork and Lee Singers while Joe spends his time with school, playing the gimba for dorm worship, and trying to start a wrestling club. Separately, they are busy enough to appreciate the time they do get to hang out.

The writing on the wall...

...happens to be in the basement of a house on Oak Street not too far from campus. These three roommates, Justin Rose, Trey Tanner and Ben Gurrad live in what might be the most lavishly furnished home of any Lee University student. All sophomores and all musicians, these three guys are actively involved in Campus Choir. As one might imagine, a large house with only three guys allows for ample space and a lot of company. Being one of the closer living spaces to campus, their house is home to a lot of friends, particularly those still living on campus. Some days, according to the guys, they will come home only to discover people who do not live there, watching television and hanging out with friends. Visiting and signing their concrete wall in the basement happens to be another quirk of their living quarters. An ambitious group, these three hope to someday have their wall signed by none other than Paul Conn.

You might be a roommate if...

...you have a slightly unhealthy obsession with coffee, plan your evenings around The Daily Show with Jon Stewart, engage in "Mocha Mondays" at Pathway's coffee shop, and have cabinets full of spices and condiments with no food to put them on. This happens to be the lifestyle that Beth Ritter, Ashley Barrett, Katie McKinney, Ann Pickens and Rachel Heath dwell in. Friends and roommates since their freshmen year, these five senior girls have shared a house off-campus near Lee University's baseball field for about two years. Clearly, each roommate is independent and attaining her goals, but still, there is a love and loyalty that brings them home to their friend-filled family each day. With their refrigerator containing pictures, comics and homemade magnets, these girls are hostesses to friends and faculty alike, providing dinner, an entertaining atmosphere and a living room that makes you feel more home-like than in any normal bachelorette pad of five college roommates.

CHAT TOWN

The places we go to Chattanooga offers a sense of art and class, contrasting the small town life of Cleveland. When Lee students just need a place to get away, the closest thing they have is Chattanooga.

One of the favorite places to go while in Chattanooga is Rembrant's Coffee House. You can enjoy a hot drink inside on a cold day or take something cool out on the garden terrace in the summer. Behind Rembrant's lies the Back Inn Cafe and Tony's. Both offer fine dining with an incredible view, perfect for a nice date.

Coolidge Park is perfect for a day with your friends. You can toss a frisbee or football, or even study out on the huge lawn. Then, after playing or studying, Clumpy's Ice Cream is a great place to cool down.

The Walking Bridge is another beautiful sight of downtown Chattanooga. It offers a relaxed atmosphere to hang out and take in the scenery.

The Bluff View Art District has an intriquing collection of restaurants, gardens, galleries, terrace cafe's, working artist studios and beautiful scenic views. Lee students don't have to spend money to get a little culture and relaxation.

Freshmen

Impressions

Let's just face the facts for a moment. If a person was trying to find a freshman they would not have to go far or look in any obscure places or even ask around for help. Anyone who has been on Lee's campus for more than three days knows that freshmen, by default, are usually in the cafeteria, the Ped Mall or their dorm rooms. It's not necessarily by their own choice; actually, one might say that the life of a freshman here is pre-prescribed. All freshmen, whether they like it or not, are required to have a meal plan and live on campus. The Ped Mall just happens to be in the center of that world and is why freshmen reside there so often. That's just how it is. However, each year is made different aside from all the facts stated because of the people who walk onto campus for their first year of freedom.

ABOVE: Several freshmen students complete five of their first ten service hours together at a nearby nursing home during Lee University's DEKE Day. Ashley Eberhart:

"Service-learning is a great idea. If people are exposed to it, I think they will see the rewards and why it's required of us. Then, maybe, people will start practicing it for themselves."

Kristen Palmer:

"We stay in the cafeteria for two hours. We are seriously in there all the time just hanging out. I go there when I want to study. Usually if I hang out in the dorm I'm hanging out in the lobby or the kitchen."

Rick Jump:

"I'm pretty involved on campus so the only time I go to my dorm is basically to eat, sleep or study. I don't really have a lot of time to be involved in my dorm."

Anthony L.A. Williams, II:

"The Ped Mall is a great place to just relax and do homework in the great outdoors. I go there at least three times a week and hang out with friends."

Hurricane Katrina
Disaster Relief

There are some events in the life of every individual that, when looking back over the course of a lifetime, will not only stand out, but will reach out, grab the individual and shake them like only reality can. Being privileged enough to aid in the Hurricane Katrina Relief Effort will certainly be one of those events for me. Not too long after the initial destruction of the storm had ended, I was informed that I would be traveling to Pascagoula, Mississippi with several other members of the Student Leadership Council.

Much of the work we did was simply organizing a seemingly endless amount of supplies, as well as serve meals several times a day in a drive-thru sort of fashion. The storm had not struck individuals based on socioeconomic status or race, for when one worn out automobile would drive through, a perfectly unharmed, shiny SUV or family car would follow right behind.

Throughout the course of that weekend, God taught me many things, most of which seemed to revolve around my own selfishness. I suppose you could say that I re-learned all of the principles of giving, sacrifice, and pain that I had long shoved out of my memory. A hurricane may not have rattled my world in a physical sense, but my emotions and walk with Christ were definitely rocked in the aftermath, and I am ever thankful for it.

Habitat for Humanity
Building More Than Houses

These simple words are the words that shape Habitat for Humanity and its purpose. Habitat for Humanity of Cleveland is a nonprofit, ecumenical Christian housing ministry seeking to eliminate poverty housing and homelessness in Cleveland.

This year a group of Lee students have started a Habitat Campus Chapter for the Cleveland Community. Through this chapter, Lee students will have the chance to help build houses and educate others on what Habitat is all about. Although this is a new organization, this group will continue to grow and take part in building six houses in the Cleveland area this year. There has already been 36 houses built in Cleveland and there are currently 50 families on the waiting list for a home.

Lee's Habitat Chapter has a long-term goal to raise over $25,000 in order to build a home completely supported by Lee University students.

Happy Holidays

There is something about the warmth of the holidays; Thanksgiving and Christmas seem to bring out the best in people. It is not uncommon on Lee's campus to hear students planning their own Thanksgiving dinners or Secret Santa gift exchanges. People plan parties and love to share the season with their friends. These trends not only go on amongst friends, but also within the campus every year.

Livingston Hall is one of the many dorms that encourages their residents to get together for the season. Stephanie Barr, a resident assistant from Livingston, mentions how she feels about a Thanksgiving tradition they throw each year. "This is the second year that I have been involved in the potluck and it gets better each year," she said. Along with the dinners that the dorms put together before Thanksgiving break, Dr. Conn generously invites anyone who cannot go home for the holidays to join him at the Holiday Inn for a Thanksgiving meal of their own; this year almost 60 students attended and it has become a wonderful tradition at Lee, again portraying that Lee really is a family. When students return from break, the Christmas tree in the Student Union is standing proudly, Parker Street has been lined with the infamous red poinsettias and the campus has begun to look a lot like Christmas. This means one very important thing, the semester is almost over. It is time to tie up loose ends, talk to or maybe even beg professors to be merciful when evaluating and compiling final grades, and for some, this is the last chance they will get to enjoy Lee as they prepare to walk across the stage for the December graduation. So, whether they stay at Lee for the holidays or are able to get back to their families, each student has the opportunity to feel like they are home for the holidays. *Copy by Christy Williamson. Looking Back

A tribute to the presidency of Dr. Paul Conn

As we reach the final chapter in the first two decades of Dr. Paul Conn's presidency at Lee, it is evident that his guidance has revolutionized this institution in countless remarkable ways. Through his humble leadership, Dr. Conn has developed Lee from a mere college to a renowned university, more than tripled the student body, increased the campus by nearly 100 acres and influenced the role of Lee within the community. President Conn is the rare type of leader who is both deeply respected by his peers and highly revered and loved by those he oversees. Over the last two decades, Dr. Conn's faithful leadership has reshaped Lee University and his character has touched the lives of all who comprise this institution.

ALASKA

The first Lee University Global Perspectives trip to Alaska was led by Dr. Pam Browning and Dr. Debbie Murray. The trip was a whirlwind of sights and experiences that sought to "quaint us with a group of people of a different culture who live within our own boundaries," says Dr. Browning.

The students experienced Alaska starting in Anchorage and traveled throughout the state. One of their first stops found the students teaching at the Kenaitze Indian Head Start, which is a school that teaches Alaskan children the traditional, substance way of life. The Lee students' experiences also included an eight hour train ride to Mount McKinnley, a bush plane ride to the Inupiat Indian village of Buckland, and a trip to Kotzebue, which is located above the Arctic Circle. "When we first arrived in Kotzebue, the students were quite shocked," notes Dr. Browning of the inhabitants' oppressive living conditions. "There was no beauty and very little hope." Visiting Kotzebue was the defining moment for this trip as the students got to witness firsthand how difficult life can become for those who find themselves facing less than desirable circumstances.

GHANA, WEST AFRICA

"They might have no money, not eaten in days, had a terrible day, or anything, yet they are always 'fine,' which I think is wonderful. It is not just an expression, they really believe that they truly are fine."
- Katie McKinney

UNITED KINGDOM STUDIES

"I do this because I love the United Kingdom. I feel more at home there than I do in Cleveland," explains Dr. Robert Barnett of the annual trip that has become his passion. "This is not a vacation for me, yet I do see it as the most important thing that I do."

The United Kingdom Studies trip, which is led by Dr. Barnett and Dr. Daniel Hoffman, has become one of the most popular and sought after Global Perspective trips offered by Lee.

Last year, more than 50 members of the Lee family participated on this trip, which followed the ruins of Hadrian's Wall across the nation, visited castles and cathedrals and traveled to locations such as Edinburgh, Stratford and the Lake District. One of the great appeals and benefits to this trip, according to Dr. Hoffman, is the lack of a language barrier to limit interactions between the students and the locals. "There are enough differences to make it a rewarding experience without the added threat posed by language," says Dr. Hoffman. The common language allows the students to fully embrace the culture and greatly learn from their surroundings. "What's really exciting is to watch the students ... we always have lives that are changed," muses Dr. Barnett.

RELIGION & CULTURE IN IRELAND

"I am beginning to realize that people are really the same no matter where you go. The Irish may have a starkingly different heritage but underneath they are no different than I am." - Jason Rogers

UKRAINE

"Through seeing the hardships, the students come away stronger," says Dr. Joann Higginbotham of the post-Soviet nation. "I just feel that this trip really epitomizes what Global Perspectives is all about ... the students learn the culture through living with host families; they get to see firsthand the hardships that these people face. You can still see the remnants of the KGB, but Ukraine is slowly changing."

The Global Perspectives trip to the Ukraine was started by the late Dr. Schimmels and continues through the work of Dr. Higginbotham, Michael Sturgeon, and Alan McClung. This year, after completing a six-week crash course in Russian, the students immersed themselves in the Ukrainian culture through exploring places such as Kiev, Poltava, and – for the first time in the history of this trip - Yalta. "It is a work trip. You hit the ground running and you crash when you return to your host family each evening," explains Dr. Higginbotham. Staying with host families allowed the students to further immerse themselves into the culture through experiencing the daily lives of the Ukrainian people. Many of the host families also traveled with the students and served as personal guides throughout the region. This significant aspect of the program, allowed the students to develop deep relationships with both their host families and the nation of Ukraine.

CONQUEST OF MEXICO

Joined by Dr. Matthew Melton, Dean of the College of Arts and Sciences, Dr. Jason Ward led 12 Lee students through the Mexican nation. The purpose of this trip was to focus on the Spanish invasion of Mexico, which was accomplished through the tracing of Cortez's route. One unique aspect of this trip was that it presented the opportunity for the students to view history from both sides of the story; that of the conquerors and that of the vanquished. "There is nothing cooler, from a historical perspective, than to be where something actually happened; where Cortez actually stood," noted Dr. Ward.

In guiding this trip, Dr. Melton and Dr. Ward desired to both dispel any myths that may have been held and "to put the students in the position of real Mexicans." Through visiting historical relics, like a sixteenth century Franciscan Monastery and ruins of ancient civilizations and modern day cities such as Vera Cruz, the students were able to witness firsthand the cause and effect of European influence upon the Mexican people. "Mexico is a very complex society, which is something that the students got to see," concludes Dr. Ward.

INDEPENDENT STUDIES: SPAIN

"Something about the game seemed to offer a more accurate representation of the culture than any museum or cathedral really could. The experience of attending a futbol match offered a glimpse of the people - their attitudes, their tendencies, their passions, and everything it is that, for better or worse, makes them completely and perfectly Spanish."
- Jordan Conn

SUMMER SPANISH INSTITUTE IN CHILE

"There is a uniqueness about South America that isn't necessarily an allure," says Dr. Paul DeLaLuz in regard to the Chilean trip that he recently sponsored along with Dr. Jose Minay.

In its eleventh year, the Summer Spanish Institute's Chilean Global Perspectives trip was once again an enormous success and served to introduce 28 Lee students to one of the most unique nations in the world. Because of its geographical location, many of the students were shocked to find that their "summer" studies would actually be taking place during the Chilean winter. The trip included a vast array of experiences ranging from skiing in the Andes to exploring the city of Santiago to working with the Church of God in one of the poorest neighborhoods in the entire country.

Academically, the primary purpose of the trip was to immerse the students in the Spanish language. Through spending five weeks south of the Equator, the students were able to find time to get acclimated to their surroundings and witness the daily lives of the Chilean people. To Dr. DeLaLuz, it was important for the students to "feel comfortable in the culture" so that they would be able to fully engage in the intensive interaction that this trip promotes. Furthermore, the students participated in rigorous Spanish language classes, which served to greatly enrich their experiences.

"A lot of students don't really know what to expect," concedes Dr. DeLaLuz, "yet there is something about that culture that really resonates with the students."

THE SEVEN CHURCHES OF REVELATION: TURKEY

"A greater sense of the reality of the biblical texts" was what Dr. Jerome Boone wished to impress upon the minds of the students who joined him in Turkey in May. In addition to visiting Istanbul, which is considered to be capitol of organized Christianity, the group of students was able to visit the ruins of each of the seven churches mentioned in the book of Revelation. "This is the very seabed of Christianity; it's where Christianity began," comments Dr. Boone of the Turkish nation.

"The defining moment for this trip, however, came upon the students' visit to the ancient city of Ephesus," states Dr. Boone. The realization that they were standing in the very spot where the Apostle Paul had lived, had a profound effect on travelers. "It is the greatest setting to study the Bible; where it was written," explains Dr. Boone.

This first time Global Perspectives trip also featured various excursions to historical locations such as Troy and Troas, which is where the Apostle Paul received his Macedonian vision and began his European ministry. Experiences such as these have caused the School of Religion to eagerly anticipate the departure of their next trip to this deeply historical land.

Breaking the mold, Lee University is growing more and more in diversity every year, with numbers on the increase from various states and countries around the world.

different faces of LEE

Close your eyes and picture the typical Lee student. Who do you have in mind? It seems easy to picture a white, Church of God student from Ohio, Tennessee or Georgia. Now open your eyes and look around. There are people of every ethnicity, every religion and denomination, and from all over the world. Lee is a virtual melting pot of diversity.

Phil Cook, director of admissions, said, "Lee's ethnic diversity is at an all-time high. We have the largest number of international students that we have ever had with students from more than 40 countries. Baptist students have the 2nd largest denominational representation on our campus. We have students from every state. All these things contribute to the overall quality of the Lee experience."

According to the Lee University website, 48 states are represented on campus, and even though a majority of those students do come from Ohio, Tennessee and Georgia, there are still students from far-away states such as Washington and California.

There are also 58 countries represented at Lee, including the Bahamas, Nigeria, South Africa, Korea, Honduras and the Ukraine. The question that could be raised is, how do these students even hear about Lee?

Charis Johnson, a Lee student from the Bahamas heard about the school from her pastor. "I remember when I first stepped on the grounds of Lee University – my first impression was this is surely nothing like the Bahamas. I wondered if my pastor was sure that this was the place I should be at. It was definitely a culture shock."

Senior Tim Passmore said, "I moved over from England at the age of 17. I grew up in London, which was obviously a lot different from Cleveland, Tennessee. My father was asked to pastor a church here, so we moved over and I finished high school in Chattanooga." With a smirk he added, "When I realized that I couldn't afford to go to any of the colleges I had been accepted to, I came to Lee as a last resort. Within a few minutes I had been offered a full scholarship to come to Lee.... It wasn't what I had expected or even hoped for initially, but I have come to realize that Lee was exactly where I was supposed to be."

When it comes to the typical student label, Johnson said, "At first it was easy to understand and see the stereotype that 'all Lee students are white, Church of God and middle class.' In most of my classes I was the only black in the midst of this stereotype, but Lee has become so diverse over the past year or so that the stereotype has changed. Now it's hard not to notice in its enhanced beautification that this campus includes persons of different ethnicities, languages and experiences."

Passmore has also noticed a change. "I have become surprised at how diverse Lee's campus has become in just a few years.... Lee provides a great community of engagement with foreign students and faculty." He adds, "Having international students here probably benefits Lee more than it does the foreign students. Through them, the community can learn about different perspectives and worldviews, while at the same time become comfortable with other cultures."

It may be hard to let go of the Lee student stereotype, but all around the university, it's changing. We are growing and diversity is only going to grow with the rest of Lee, making even more of an impact on the school and the community.

(graduation)

Passing under the bright sun, wearing the robes of black, the graduates of 2006 pass into the pages of history....their actions great or small, changing the face of Lee forever.

Graduates look on with hopes of bright futures; their paths are set, but not quite revealed. Looking back on their times here, the laughter, even the pain, it is easy to see how Lee has become home.

But the time has come; Dr. Conn shakes your hand and gives you a diploma.

It's now over, but an imprint remains.

Basking in accomplishment, with friends and family in sight, go ahead, smile.

Take it all in, you deserve the spotlight.

Congratulations to all the graduates. Be proud of all your accomplishments.

Your futures are bright, just like the sun.

Sports

Athletes on Lee's campus spend much time in practice and training to acquire the greatness that so many of the teams continue to achieve. This section is a glimpse into each of Lee's sporting teams and the season's stats. The photos will prove the dedication that's poured into the different athletic events.

Erika Peters tackled the Sports pages during the spring semester of this year. This was her first time being the Sports editor and the sections first time being in color. Erika has left her designing touch on this delightful section.

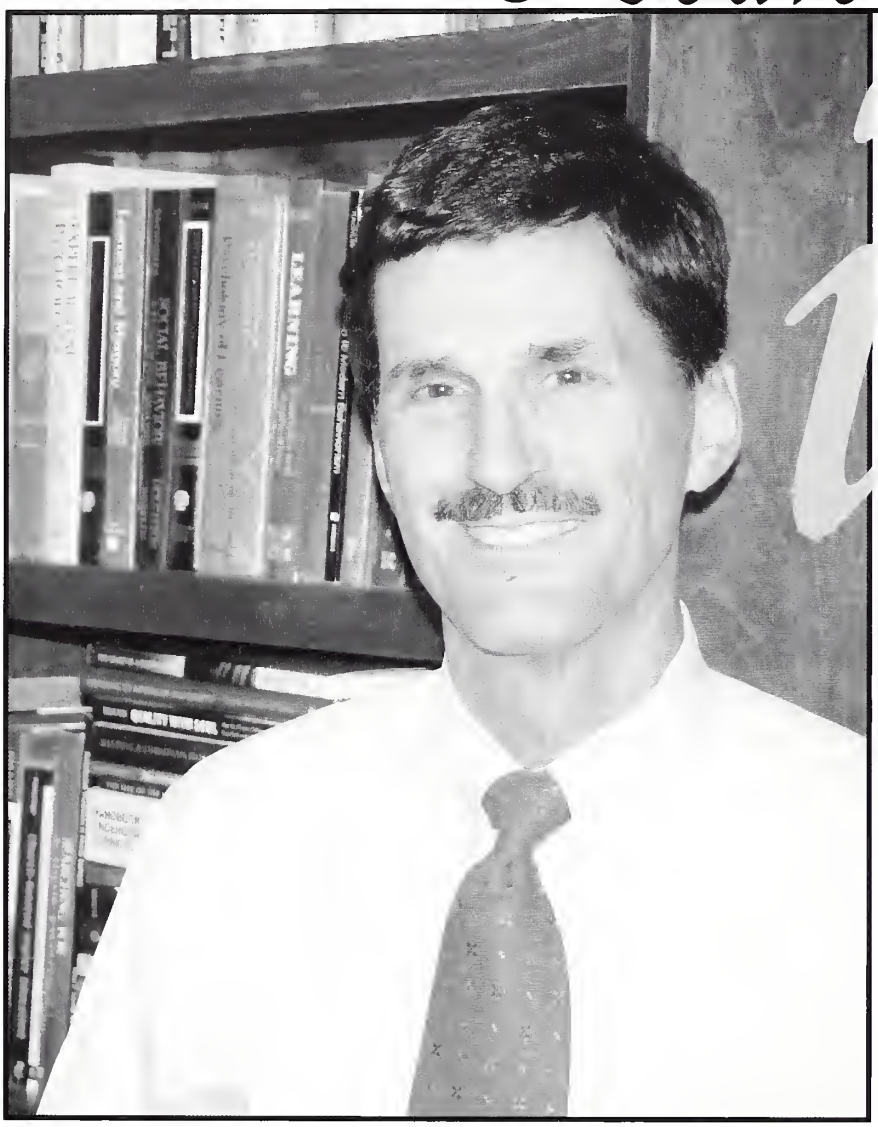
Academics

The Academics section covers the scholarly side of Lee University. A teacher can make or break a classroom experience for many students and Lee is privileged to have some of the most outstanding professors. Classes, professors, majors and the opinions of students are all contained within these pages. Several adacemic changes have occurred this year - whether it be the new foreign language labs, new builidings or new faculty faces, this section informs.

Elizabeth Cave is the newest addition to the Vindagua staff. Making the transition during the semsester wasn't difficult for her. Quite the contrary, actually. Beth jumped in and added creativity to the Academics section.

ACADEMICS

PRESIDENT & board of directors



In President Paul Conn's conference room, a plaque reads a quote from Harry Truman: "Leadership is the ability to get people to do what they don't want to do and like it." The plaque was a gift from Don Medlin, a member of the Board of Directors, who passed away shortly after homecoming. Overall, the year contained big changes for Dr. Conn, as this was his first year where none of his original vice presidents were still cabinet members.

At the start of the fall semester, the Operations Department had no vice president and there was not a replacement yet in mind to carry on after the late Dale Goff; the future of the department had not yet been determined. The Operations Department included Physical Plant, athletics, Campus Safety and more. Yet, until a plan for the future was developed and insitituted for the department, Dr. Conn took responsibilty to delegate instruction among the various staffs.

The Board of Directors met in January, where they discussed many new goals for the school in the upcoming years. They prepared for a new fundraising campaign and set new building projects for the next five years.

working with the faculty is the Vice President, Dr. Carolyn Dirksen's most gratifying part of her job. "We get to do things like think of new ways to make the curriculum or teaching better," Dirksen said. "In addition, every 10 years, we have to develop a five year enhancement plan of the quality of learning for the Southern Association of Colleges and Schools." The final steps of the process were completed at the start of the fall semester.

Although she does not directly deal with students as a vice president (except when pertaining to appeals), Dr. Carolyn Dirksen enjoys being able to teach a class within the semester and speaking at chapel services. She has also taught English to non-native students and teachers who intend on teaching non-native speakers.

"The hardest part is making personnel decisions," said Dirksen. She also makes hire and termination decisions and orchestrates performance reviews with the faculty.

"What I enjoy most is being able to travel," said Dirksen. Having been able to travel around mostly Europe, she has also been to Cambodia, North Korea, South Africa, and many other places.

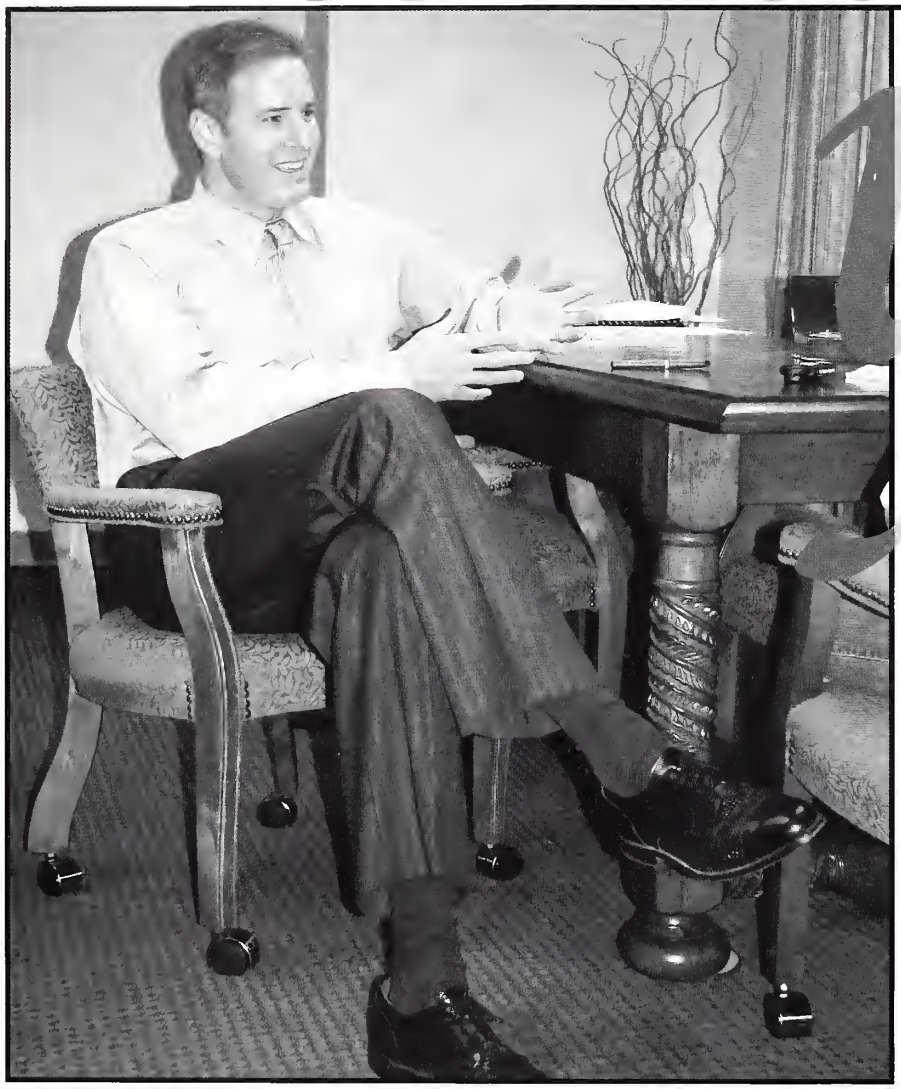
BUSINESS & finance



Chris Conine, Vice President of Business and Finance

oungest Vice President in Lee University's history, at age 39, Mr. Chris Conine had worked as comptroller as of three years ago until obtaining the role of his predacessor, Dr. David Painter. He commented, "In replacing him, I have big shoes to fill. He passed the torch to me. While it's not mine to keep, it is my responsibility for it to keep burning."

As a newly created position, the burser was a chief student service officer. "Student services needed someone who could act more as a problem solver with the students," said Conine. The role includes dealing with the receivables, billing matters, and working with students when pertaining with financial difficulties.

Chris Conine had attended Lee from 1983-1987, where he had met his wife Angela Thompson Conine (1985-1989). They have a set of eight-year-old triplets, two identical and one fraternal.

He describes Lee as a, "place where you can't wait to come to work." He views himself as a problem solver and in doing so, he enjoys inspiring others to "do great things" and providing customer service.

ADMINISTRATION

Assisting students, working with families, and convincing those families that Lee is the best option for students is what Vice President Dr. Gary Ray finds most important concerning his job. "We like to make sure that they feel confident about the choice they have made," said Ray.

With freshmen enrollment on a continual rise, the incoming class of freshmen in the fall escalated to 761 students, the highest number in Lee's history thus far. Dr. Gary Ray felt that having friendly faculty and staff, outstanding facilities, and being able to provide good service is what makes Lee attractive for so many students.

"It's not about me. It is about the people that work at Lee. This is a place filled with passionate people that all work together that want to serve our students well. I am just one of many."

Full of memories and appreciation for the school, Ray himself was a Lee graduate. He currently has a daughter in high school and sophomore son here at Lee.

Dr. Walt Mauldin, Vice President of Student Life

From being a third baseman with the Lee Singers to being a certified diver for 20 years, including diving into the Great Barrier Reef in Australia, diving in Bermuda and the Caemon Islands, Vice President Dr. Walt Mauldin attends Greek Council meetings, directs the Lee Singers, and works with many other student organizations.

"The reason I came into this position was because I wanted to be able to understand the entire university structure. Being on the cabinet with the president you are able to see everything going on," Mauldin commented.

Reflecting on his most rewarding moments, he says, "It's to see students come into Lee uncertain about their futures, really lock into what God has called them to do, and go away from Lee forever changed."

The pride that Mauldin has for the students is exponential, especially after watching them assist with the hurricane victims. "I am just blown away by the quality of our students and seeing how they responded in such positive ways to something so devastating to the Gulf Coast."

BEHAVIORAL & social sciences

"I wanted to pursue counseling in some fashion."

The Department of Behavioral and Social Sciences offers majors in Human Development and Family Studies, Psychology and Sociology. These majors directly feed into careers such as social work, counseling and pastoring.

Psychology major Raymond Beckman, who works as a mental health tech at a children's psychiatric hospital, commented, "I have always wanted to learn how to better help and relate to hurting people. Thus, I wanted to pursue counseling in some fashion."

An aim for the department has been to expand the students' understanding of their own social context, increase knowledge of individual behavior and facilitate their adjustment to a changing society.

Sociology, considered a time consuming major, forces students to be involved in many different, cross-relating aspects. Students are pushed to look at the bigger picture.

Psychology major Julie Rader commented, "The psychology professors here have helped me to understand that it is my responsiblity as a Christian to be involved in the world of mental health. I choose this program because I have realized that the mind is the center of the body and I want to understand and explore it further."

he Department of Business, one of Lee's fastest growing arenas, has approximately 500 majors and 42 secondary majors. The department seeks to equip students going into the business world with qualities such as leadership, critical thinking skills, and ethical and philosophical principles.

Ryan Scherer says that "as far as the business professors go, I feel that they are all very approachable; and I feel that they are not only knowledgeable in their individual areas, but experienced as well. I believe that this (experience) sets the Business Department apart from all the others." Ryan states that "the skills, values, and ethics that the Business Department have taught me will give me a competitive edge in the business world."

Sarah Wright says that the best part about being a Business Administration major is "getting to know your professors and learning from their personal experiences." Sarah's goal is "to become a meeting planner to help organize and run large events and meetings for organizations." For Sarah, "Business is not just about trying to start a new business to gain profits it is also about joining with other people in an effort to accomplish a goal."

The Department of Business teaches its students to aim high. The department's emphasis on practicality and leadership skills in a competitive market, combined with the experience of its educators, is really what sets this department apart.

The options are endless. Whether on stage in the spotlight, behind a video camera lense or writing a news column, career choices are plentiful within the Department of Communication and the Arts' majors. The department provides majors in Communications, with emphases offered in Advertising, Public Relations and Media Writing, Telecommunications, which can include an emphasis in Church Media, and Drama.

Mass Communications, with an empahsis in Public Relations, major Zeeshan Aslam commented, "It is a very versatile major and can go into many different fields. I enjoy establishing and building relationships with people." Although not all Communication majors are required to complete an internship, all are required to work with either the Vindagua or Clarion, the campus' yearbook and newspaper, writing stories, assisting with the business work or being an assistant photographer.

For Drama students, the Lee University Theatre Program sponsors two major theatrical productions each year, as well as traveling drama troupes and a Summer Community Theatre Production. Drama major Michelle Hinson commented, "It's very challenging physically and mentally because we are constantly using our bodies and having to think. Yet, it is very rewarding because you perfect your skills."

ENGLISH & foreign languages

"I enjoy speaking Spanish with random people..."

Drinking coffee, lounging in sofas and chatting away is what students and faculty saw, heard and smelled when walking through the first floor in the Vest Building. For the first time ever, the English and Modern Foreign Languages Department has introduced the Language Cafe. The motives behind the cafe are to enhance students' speaking abilities. While students are able to write, read and learn grammatical structure in the classrooms, the department felt that students should move from the structured language labs into a more relaxed environment. The labs are managed by native speakers.

An option for additional help to Spanish students is a tutorial lab open two days a week, which Spanish major Luke Gorton manages. Gorton said, "I enjoy speaking Spanish with random people who happen to speak it and enjoy helping out anyone who needs a question answered."

While many students with English, French or Spanish majors acquire a Secondary License, other students pursue a degree in a language with intentions to study areas such as law or theology.

The department of History and Political Science has a mission to equip its students with the knowledge to enter various fields, such as: law, education and to do international work. They provide students with majors in Anthropology, History and Political Science. Understanding and appreciating cultural diversity and increasing the awareness of political issues and stances are only a few objectives that the department seeks to spread across its students.

Anthropology major Emily Anderson said, "As a Christian, it is important to be aware of how people differ from one another and to realize that these differences should be valued and appreciated. The courses in this major have helped me to be more open-minded and less ethnocentric." As an anthropology major, students review human beings and society and the relativity to culutre and biology.

Anthropology major Keely Shepard, who had taken part in a research opportunity in Santiago, Chile, has written and presented a paper at the Southern Anthropological Association. "After my graduation, it is my intention to join the Peace Corps. At this point, I know I want to work for a humanitarian organization, preferebly the Middle East," Shepard commented.

triving to equip its students for success through its commitment to excellence in teaching, interdisciplinary studies and innovative reasearch, the Department of Mathematics and Natural Sciences provides nine different majors for its students. Different career options for Mathematics majors include going into criptology, being a forensic analyst or population ecologist.

As the Science department is growing to one of the largest on campus, with six divisions and 21 faculty members, a large percentage of the students are accepted into medical school or attend graduate studies following graduation.

Another Health Sciences major, Heidi Rominger, who plans on becoming a nurse, said, "I am interested in the medical field and knew that I wanted to pursue a career in it. I am good with people and enjoy brightening people's days."

Health Science major Paula Wirtz commented, "I can honestly admit that I have never been more intellectually stretched than I have in the majority of my science classes. Although this has been frustrating to me at times, I have come to realize that these challenges have been an essential part in building a healthy confidence in my God-given abilities as both a student and a future professional."

y requiring the Healthy and Effective Lifestyles class, students are able to view the department's goal of enhancing daily healthy choices to stay continually fit. While the Secondary Education major is a largely proportionate choice among Lee's students, the department also prepares students for careers in athletic training, recreation and physical education.

Secondary Education major Jonathan Crabtree stated, "Kids need male rolemodels in the classroom, not just on the ball field. Christ was a teacher... I think I'll follow Him."

Health Science major, with an emphasis in Fitness and Wellness, Jenny Kidd, who intends on becoming a personal trainer and nutritionist, wants "to work with families because of overweight kids. I also want to help the families because it is a family effort. In general, I want to help Americans as a whole to help them become more healthy." With this major, students will be ready to help those learn to exercise and eat properly.

Students seeking to enter athletic training are encouraged to take one of the American College of Sports Medicine certification exams after graduation.

The Department of Early Childhood, Elementary and Special Education cultivates students that feel the are called to teach in the classroom. The department provides majors in Human Development, Interdisciplinary Studies and Special Education. These majors allow students to teach pre-kindergarten to fourth grade, kindergarten to sixth grade, and to work with agencies or schools that do not require a teacher licensure.

To make sure that students are prepared for the courses and careers ahead of them, students are required to have interviews with professors and be recommended into the school of education. Elementary Education major Wendy Collis, who has two children of her own, said, "I went into education because I see the teachers now and they aren't there for the kids. I love kids and want to make a caring impression on them."

Human Development, with a teacher licensure for grades K-8, major Kim Grayson said, "I want to do more than just teach the five main subjects from worn out textbooks. I want to develop a love for learning and school in the students that I teach."

While enrolled in the Teacher Education program, many hours are demanded of students to observe classrooms within the Bradley County School System or the Cleveland City Schools.

Opportunities appear endless before any music major between both on and off-campus outlets. Whether tutoring children on how to play an instrument or participating in one of the school's performing groups, learning opportunities are bountiful.

Music Education major Elizabeth Watson, who already teaches violin students on a regular basis, commented, "I am looking forward to having a better understanding of music so I can be a better teacher. I believe God has blessed me with the ability to relate well with kids, as well as the ability to teach them about music."

Jason Vawter, a Music Education major as well said, "I hope to get a job overseas in the Department of Defense Dependent Schools system teaching military children." Vawter, a member of the SAI music fraternity, was given the chance to practice his teaching skills, while serving the community, as he gave private lessons in basic percussion to a child from a nearby school.

Hours and hours are spent practicing and perfecting their talents. The department offers studio instruction and courses in music theory, history and literature.

Music Business major Ally Rodriguez, who wants to record or scout for a Christian label, commented, "Music is my passion and the business side is the practical application. I felt I needed to understand the entire music world and industry better." Internships and participating with Lee's ensembles have become a way for students enrolled with the School of Music to enhance their skills as musicians.

Music Business major Kristi Vanoy reflects, "I would like to become more involved with a church music mininstry. This has been apart of my life since childhood. As a pastor's daughter, the act of leading worship has always been something I have greatly enjoyed." She credits part of her success to the professors at Lee, by saying, "I believe that the talented professors at Lee come to us with knowledge that challenges us to be greater than we once thought we could be."

hile creating an entertainment filled with the attitude to be a servant for Christ in ministry, the Department of Christian Ministries, through an evangelical and Pentecostal perspective, prepares students to work in churches as leaders of all kinds. They provide majors in Christian Ministry, Christian Education, Intercultural Studies, Pastoral Ministry and Youth Ministry. Each major focuses on different aspects concerning the development of people spiritually, morally and socially within churches.

Business and Pastoral Ministry major Gabe Whitmer, who wants to "teach and lead todays struggling church," said, "One of my greatest joys in life is to be an aisle to draw people in. My outgoing personality, that the Lord has blessed me with, and my care for people fits perfectly into His plans for my life." Many Pastoral and Youth Ministry majors work as pastors or evangelists in churches and attend seminars or practicums to assist them in furthering their knowledge of a church's function.

Intercultural Studies majors have the choice between an emphasis in Missiology or Urban Missiology. These options assist students as they plan to work as missionaries either in America or overseas. Intercultural Studies major Janna Gould commented, "I plan on living a life that fulfills the Great Commission, no matter what it looks like."

The department also provides a minor in philosophy to give students the opportunity to review the works of philosophers and attain knowledge on issues of Western thought.

Teaching through experience, many professors from the Theology Department engage students in critical analysis of personal conviction. Bible and Theology major Shawn Scott commented, "Through the classes I have taken here, I have been able to examine the beliefs and opinions I was taught growing up and really evaluate why I believe what I believe."

Following graduation, students have many options to choose from. Graduates attend seminary or graduate schools, work for non-profit organizations or become pastors. ucked away in every nook and cranny, students can be found from the first to third floor of the William G. Squires Library. With a friendly staff of both librarians and student workers, students from Lee University and the Church of God Seminary were aided by the thousands of books contained on shelves and the plethora of information provided by the electronic databases. The staff at the library is always pulling books from the shelves and buying books requested by faculty to keep material updated.

Students are always filtered throughout the library doing homework, studying for the big test the following day or just reading a good book. The big attraction pulling students towards the library is that "it's usually quiet and peaceful," commented Greg Nixon. New additions within the library were newly decorated study rooms with computers, a plasma screen television to provide updated information and new book releases. In January, an old classroom was remodeled into a lab for both free student access and instruction.

The third floor of the library is where the Dixon Pentecostal Research Center is located. The center contains the official Church of God archives and over 10,000 cataloged books, periodicals and various Pentecostal artifacts.

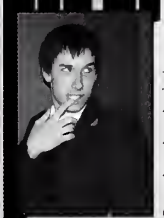
Expressions

The Student Expressions section was created out of the need for appreciation and recognition for those artistically inclined individuals on Lee University's campus. Ranging from paintings to poetry to photography, this brand new section gives a glimpse of the creativity that is abounding from the minds of Lee's students.

Colleen Ward came on staff as the head photographer and agreeably and cheerfully co-edited this brand new section - Student Expressions. Her artistic eye compiled the medium for this individualist section.



John Diffenderfer took a break from the Lifestyles section to compile and create a completely new section of the Vindagua - Student Expressions. He added Diffenderfer flare to this black and white section.

EXPRESSIONS

When Things Go

by Cara Iavarone

Say the way Desire is an open cornfield you've lost yourself in. Staring up into a maze of blue sky, your ankles raw in the dry, dusty husks you'll never leave. So open your mouth. Let the wind sweep down your throat. Carry seeds into your lungs until your blooming. Daffodils or dandelions rooting in your runaway dreams. Flurries of florets blown as wishes to pirouette in the light that is white and arid without you. Weightless, like a vacant taste, you stand still as silence routes your bones. Dormant warmth easing from the soil till you exist as nothing more than the winsome breath that subsumes you.

What you thought was a star in the north sky is a whole galaxy.
What you thought was a folk tale about walking on water & lying with lions turns out to be truer than all the sun-bleached bones of hard facts.
What you thought was a mouth is really a bottomless well.
What you thought was loss
is really an orchard of cherries.
What you thought was a youthful version of yourself turns out to be a shadow shifting out of your eye's corner.
What you thought was a snail's slick trail turns out to be a sidewalk's veins, branching off among the dandelions.
You thought the dandelions stood in place,
but come to find they're dancing
across the wind like tumbleweeds, wheeling without thought of gravity.
What you thought was gravity is only your body's leaden weight pinning down your dandelion soul.
What you thought was your chest is really an impenetrable forest, & what you thought was a forest is the ever-diminishing hiding place of your crimes, & the place to free them is at the bottom of your lungs, where a whole universe billows even now in the form of old loves.

What you thought was a one-time high becomes a string of lights wrapped around the temple of your body till you're one great ball of wire, incandescent, blowing fuses like popcorn.
What you thought was a one-night stand becomes a diaper trail sagging over the moon.
What you thought were whitecaps shouldering to shore like the heads of the old is really your lover's voice waving against the walls & settling in the corners, reaching through your cobwebbed heart, calling your name, asking you to rise once more, to quit pretending, this isn't the way it's supposed to end.

Last Request

by Luke Hankins

Take me to Calcutta,
to the house of the dying,
walls white as bones,
floor of dust. Mother Teresa will wait as I leave, as she does for each - waves, spending themselves,
unending on the beach,
the shell-white sand.

Let her take my hand.
The dying save no room for the visit of the false friend of jealousy - you should not forget who we are.
Mother's hand will steady
our vision as the quaking earth reclaims our bones.

Perhaps, if I'm set in the sea,
my bones will be digested
and expelled onto the shore.
Perhaps lovers will one day walk on bone-white sand, steadying
each other, holding hands.
Perhaps my bones will be mixed into concrete to build towers, to reshape the broken skeleton of this city.

Built with sand, it will all fall.
Let it be. This city will be reclaimed - you must separate yourself from it, even if your bones cannot leave. Join me in Calcutta, in time. Bear me to my final birth.
Leave this city in time - follow, surging, melting through the sand like the next wave.

Ultima Ratio Regum

"The last argument of kings" - inscribed on the cannons of Louis XIV

by Luke Hankins

I refuse to write about war, about these rows of crosses and stars
arranged precisely as coordinates on a battle-plan map.

Instead, I want to tell you about the beach below, abandoned by all but waves still pounding the shoreline.
I'll tell you about emerald grass
shrouding these graves
like a royal robe.
I'll tell you how no one speaks,
walking the perimeter,
listening to the ocean's battery.
I'll even talk about the young woman kneeling with a sheet of paper, flattening it against the white stone, strafing lead across the surface to capture the inscription of her family name.

But I refuse to tell you how the first wave of troops sunk into the sand,
then the next,
the red tide unceasing.
I won't tell you about the silence of soldiers as lead was flattened against the metal wall before them, about their silence just before the armored plank was dropped.

Clubs

The Clubs section highlights the academic, diversity, greek, spiritual and social service clubs on Lee University's campus. These clubs and organizations are a huge part of the campus's personality and represent just a part of what Lee students hold valuable and important.

In remembrance of

"When you think of Frank Walker you think of a man who loved God and family. He discharged his professional responsibilities with a high level of competency, integrity and grace. His concern and love was uncompromising."
- Dewayne Thompson.

Mr. Walker has served Lee as an assistant professor in accounting. He was a member of Westwood Baptist Church, was involved in the missions committee, helped counsel as well as taught Sunday school.

Mr. Walker was a 59-year-old veteran who is survived by his wife Kathy and their three children; Sara, Josh and Caleb.

"It will not be the same walking into an accounting class without seeing Mr. Walker there. He was my favorite professor on campus and a great Christian leader in and out of the classroom. He impacted my life every day by his example. I just hope that I leave that kind of impression on everyone I meet." - Austin Thacker

"Dale's love for Lee was what motivated and defined him for the last 19 years. He became the heart and soul of the place. I believe he found his niche here, he hit his stride, professionally and personally. This is a place where - all his energy, his passion, his determination to get the job done, his spiritual drive, his skill with people, his ability to analyze situations and solve problems - Lee was place where all these wonderful talents came together." - President Paul Conn

"I am deeply grateful to say that I had the honor and the privilege to work for and along side Dale Goff. He was faithful as a leader, supportive as a mentor and trusted as a friend. I learned from his leadership that life is full of opportunities to ring out our appreciation for those who work around us. Dale understood the value of appreciation. His ability to motivate others was driven by his sense of humor, his eagerness to assist even if it meant him rolling up his sleeves. There were no tasks I faced when he was not willing to help. Dale's love for Nadine and Ginger and Shelly were evident daily in his work. His face lit up when he talked about how proud he was of his brothers or his friends.He was a close friend to so many of us. He was the kind of friend that we all hope to be - a friendship that will be continued in heaven.

The cheerful spirit that carried him forward was more than a disposition; it was the optimism of a faithful soul, who trusted in God's plan that Lee was his calling.

May we all hold on to the things that are important in life - our friendships, our passion for God's work and the very attitude Dale had that finds humor in the stressful times.To my friend, Dale - we will miss you greatly."

- Gary T. Ray

In remembrance of

(1940 - 2005)

The Lee University family suffered a great loss when Don Medlin passed away. He was a member of the Board of Directors at Lee for more than 20 years. He was also the chair of the Standing Committee on Personal and Curriculum, working closely with the Academic Affairs Department.

Medlin had a love for music and the piano. He collected many different types of pianos. This love caused Medlin to donate many of the instruments to Lee, including the grand piano that is played on the Conn Center Stage.

Robert O'Bannon was a long time friend of Medlin's. They even attended Lee together. According to O'Bannon, Medlin's kindness and generosity spilled out into other's lives in every area. "He was a kind man, had a beautiful voice and was a devout Christian," said O'Bannon. "He was an exemplary to others." Mr. Medlin will always be remembered on Lee's campus for dedicating so much of his life to Lee.

"He had a vision of what Lee could be and always encouraged what seemed impossible," said Carolyn Dirkson, who worked closely with Medlin during his time at the school. "He was also so excited about new faculty and programming that was coming to Lee, just anything new that would make Lee better."

"ANDANTE.....as I walk briskly through life with open eyes and mind, observing all, experienceing much, and embracing the excellent.....The blog of Odessa Nelson, a girl wandering into a woman's world. Christian, Musician, Music Ed. major at Lee University, Avid reader, Inquisitive about everything."

So begins the blog of Odessa Nelson, Lee senior from Sequim, Washington, who lost her life in a skiing accident on December 23rd, 2005. Odessa was born to Jeff and Diane Nelson; she was the oldest daughter, and second child in a family of six children who was home-schooled from kindergarten through the 12th grade. After attending a college in Alberta, Odessa decided that she wanted to go somewhere warmer and more challenging. She narrowed her online search to the following criteria: Christian college; a strong music department; U.S. News and World Report First Tier school; affordable.

If you think it takes a lifetime to make a significant impact, then look to the brief life of Odessa, and to the four semesters she spent on the Lee University campus. I had the perspective of an older friend who worked as an accompanist for her voice lessons, and who shared the experience of a non-Southerner in Tennessee. Odessa was talented and smart, who never coasted on her natural abilities, but worked hard to maximize her potential. She distinguished herself to her faculty members as a model student who was dedicated to excellence in everything. She was an example of goodness and cheerfulness to everyone she met; a vocal major who played the piano well enough to work as an accompanist for other students. They remember her for her encouragement and support as well as for her technical ability. Stories abound of her willingness to tutor other students in any area where she was seen as having an edge or a greater understanding, whether it was music history or algebra! It is no wonder that education was her chosen field; she was clearly a 'natural'.

Above all Odessa served God with everything that was in her. She ended her autobiography in the following way: "I've never trusted God so much with my future in my whole life. I know beyond a shadow of a doubt that He is more than able to work everything out to His good pleasure. I'm just along for the ride."

- Darlia Conn

In remembrance of Odessa Nelson

(1983 - 2005)

In remembrance of

(1941 - 2006)

"Few people have made such a huge impact on the life of Lee University as David Horton. He and Virginia have been on the music faculty during several different major transitions, and for hundreds of Campus Choir students, he has been a powerful influence, musically and spiritually." - President Paul Conn

As director of Campus Choir for 25 years, Dr. Horton taught his students more than just music. His astounding talent as a musician pushed his students to be the best they could be, while his warm humor ministered joy to the lives of those who knew him. His uncanny ability to combine the two made Dr. Horton a most respected and admired man on the campus of Lee University.

Surely the regal welcome of a shofar was blown in heaven the day Dr. David Horton was welcomed home to meet his Savior.
